

BODY DECODE • THREE STATES

The Three States

Depleted, Transitioning or Ready. The state decides whether your effort works or backfires.

Your body is not good or bad at losing fat. It is in a state.

And the state decides whether the same effort works or backfires.

That is not a motivational line. It is the reason two people can do the identical twelve weeks and get opposite results, and why the thing that worked for you at thirty does nothing at forty-five.

There are three states. Tick your way through and see which one sounds like your last few months.

States are not patterns. Your state is how much your body has available to spend right now. Your pattern is which hormone is driving where it stores. State comes first, because a plan aimed at the right pattern still does nothing on a body with nothing spare.

1 Depleted

Your body is in protection mode. It is holding on to everything, because nothing has told it that it is safe to let go.

- ☐ Waking up puffy, or heavy for no reason you can point to.
- ☐ A 3pm crash even after a full night's sleep.
- ☐ Months of training hard with nothing moving.
- ☐ Fat turning up in places it never used to.
- ☐ The feeling of doing everything right and it getting worse anyway.

THE SIGNAL THAT DECIDES IT

More effort makes this one worse.

A body in protection reads harder training and less food as more threat, so it holds tighter. What it needs is conditions, not punishment.

2 Transitioning

Your body is coming out of protection but has not locked it in. Progress is real, and fragile. It holds while you white-knuckle it, then slips the moment life gets busy.

- ☐ Some things improving while others stay stuck.

- ☐ Energy that is fine on a good week and gone on a bad one.
- ☐ The scale moves, then bounces back.
- ☐ The sense that it could work, if only it held.

THE SIGNAL THAT DECIDES IT

The win here is not intensity. It is continuity.

Do not break the thread. On this one, an ordinary week you actually complete beats a brilliant week followed by nothing.

3 Ready

Your body responds the way it is supposed to. Effort goes in, something comes back out. This is the state almost every program on the internet assumes you are already in.

- ☐ Energy that holds through the day.
- ☐ Recovery that keeps up with your training.
- ☐ Change when you change something.
- ☐ Fat responding to a sensible adjustment.

THE SIGNAL THAT DECIDES IT

Now the standard advice actually works.

This is the only state where “eat a bit less, move a bit more” does what it says on the tin.

The catch, and it is a big one

People who are good at pushing through almost always score themselves Ready and read Depleted.

Discipline hides depletion. You can feel basically fine, hold down a demanding job, train four times a week, and still be running a body that has nothing spare. Being able to cope is not the same as having capacity.

If you are the person who gets things done regardless, assume you are one state lower than you just guessed.

TRY THIS WEEK

For one week, change nothing except one thing: get to bed thirty minutes earlier.

No new plan. No cutting. Nothing to buy.

If a week of that noticeably changes your energy, your body had less spare than you thought, and that tells you which state you are actually in more honestly than any self-assessment will.

A state is a snapshot, not a personality. It describes what your body has available right now, and it moves as things change. Nobody is permanently Depleted, and nobody stays Ready through a brutal quarter.

WANT THE REAL READ RATHER THAN A GUESS?

The free 14-Day Body Decode Challenge starts by reading your state, then checks eight things against your own starting point on day seven, and gives you your pattern on day fourteen.

Free. Nothing to pay to get your read.

bodyrecode.au/challenge